PITCHING ACE OF MAJORS LOST

ousting of "Shufflin' Phil" is blow

"SHUFFLIN' PHIL" DOUGLAS AND (INSET) MANAGER JOHN MCGRAW

By BILLY EVANS
The passing of "Shufflin' Phil" Douglas of the New York Giants from organized baseball, marks the passing of one of the greatest pitchers in the history of the game.

Douglas has been barred for all time by Manager McGraw of the Giants, because, McGraw claims, he offered for a money consideration, to leave the team at this critical time in the race when the Giants needed him most.

Douglas never reached the lofty position in baseball that his remarkable ability justified, simply because he was his own worst enemy.

Physically Douglas was a perfect specimen of manhood. When in condition, there was no more effective pitcher in either league. Mentally, Douglas had the brain of a child. It was an easy matter to lead him astray.

In baseball it is a tradition that all left-handed pitchers are erratic. Ball players had a habit of calling "Shufflin' Phil" the "right-handed southpaw."

Then he would return, always repentant, and would invariably pitch so sensationally that his escapade soon would be forgotten.

Manager McGraw has suspended Douglas a dozen times during his career with the Giants. But McGraw, knowing the pitcher's weakness, has been lenient with him, and it is said that he returned later every time he ever assessed against Douglas.

His salary had been trebled since he joined the Giants, and no salary grievance is believed to have been harbored by him.

YANKIES CROSSED
Shufflin' Phil's pitching unquestionably made it possible for the New York Yankees in 1921. Douglas thrice times opposed Carl Mays, the American League ace.

He lost the opening clash, 3 to 0. In his next two starts he won against the Yankees and Mays, 4 to 2, and 2 to 1.

He kept the Giants in the series after the most of the experts had figured them out of the running.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—Cleveland forced New York from the lead in the American league, winning their second game in succession from the Yankees, 4 to 1.

New York made only three hits off Coveleskie giving them but five hits in the last two days. Not a hit was made by New York after the second inning.

Cleveland won the game in the first inning when Shawkey was slammed for three runs.

BOSTON, Aug. 24.—St. Louis played errorless ball Wednesday, defeating Boston, 6 to 3, and going into the American league lead by half a game, due to Cleveland's victory over the Yankees.

Ferguson was hit hard in the first two innings when St. Louis made enough runs to win.

Slater made three hits out of four times up and struck out for the first time since August 5.

GEORGIA WIVES Would Permit Hubby's Fishing
ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 24.—The senate committee on wild lands of the Georgia legislature has before it a bill introduced by Senator Dennis Fleming of Dougherty county to make it necessary for husbands in this state to obtain permission of their wives before going fishing.

Fleming, a fisherman himself and a married man, was merely exercising his keen Irish humor when he introduced the measure, and had no idea of hearing an echo expressed through the curiosity of so famous a person as Hudson Maxim, the inventor and author.

LEFT HANDED BATTERS CAN HIT SOUTHPAW

Is there considerable bunk to the generally accepted theory that a majority of the left-handed batters are weak against southpaw pitching?

I have always believed so, because the really great left-handed batters never experience any great difficulty in hitting southpaws.

However, it is tradition in baseball that left-handed batters are weak against left-handed pitching. Most major league managers work on that theory.

Some managers even go to the extent of having left and right-handed shifts, which they use to meet the selections of the opposing manager.

In some cases this stunt works out nicely because most right-handed batters do like to hit against southpaws. I can name a dozen major leaguers who are right-handed batters and who are not in the 300 class, yet against left-handers they are dangerous batsmen.

The use of the shift in baseball is more or less modern. It was not practiced to any great extent 20 years ago.

This shift has been a bad feature for the left-handed hitter who is not in the Cobb-Sherdel class. It tends to destroy confidence. Knowing that he will probably be taken out when a left-hander is the pitching selection of the opposition, he loses his fight and succumbs to the generally accepted belief that most left-handers cannot hit southpaws.

During a recent series that I umpired between the Washington and Detroit clubs some very unusual features of the theory that I have been expounding cropped out.

Manager Milan of the Washington club very often uses a shift in his lineup, according to whether the opposing pitcher is a right or left-hander.

In one of the games, in order to gain any possible advantage, Manager Cobb of Detroit and Ehmke, a right-hander, work the first inning against the Washington club. Cobb, a left-hander, warmed up in secret under the grandstand.

Milan, when he saw that Ehmke was to be the opposing pitcher, used all his left-handers in the lineup. At the start of the second inning Manager Cobb sent Cole, his left-hander, to the mound.

If Milan elected to use his right-handers it meant that the left-handers had injected into the lineup would have to be withdrawn, and be of no use during the rest of the game.

Possibly Milan was peeved at Cobb's strategy. Anyway he made no change in his lineup. In one inning Washington made six runs off Cole and won the game by a 10-5 score.

The following day Cobb selected Oldham, a left-hander, to work. Manager Milan of Washington, because of the success his left-handers had against Cole, tempted fate and sent in the same lineup.

Oldham was knocked out of the box in the early innings. Daus, a right-hander, succeeded him and had the Washingtonians at his mercy.

All of which made me think there was considerable bunk to the theory that left-handed batters are weak against southpaw pitching.

There certainly are no longer hitters among the left-handers of either country than Wetted and Guilford, although now and then Tolley's range is exceptional. If the Bostonian and the Oxonian happen to meet at Brooklyn we may get one answer to a debate that has raged for some time. They both are lusty wallowers when they decide to go after the distant skyline, the longest we have seen in the amateur field.

COLLEGE FRIENDS NOW RIVAL COACHES
SPOKANE, Wash., Aug. 23.—"What style of offense are you going to use this year at Idaho?" queried Charles Dorais, Gonzaga university football coach, while luncheon with R. L. Matthews, new University of Idaho coach, in Spokane recently.

Matthews withheld his reply for a moment and then said: "Gus, I'll show you all the stuff I have when my team meets you in Spokane November 25."

Thus ended a football relationship between the two grid coaches that has existed since they played together on the same team at Notre Dame university almost a decade ago.

Two coaches were teammates and close personal friends at Notre Dame, and later when they both took up football coaching as a profession, it was their policy to pass football information back and forth between them to their mutual advantage.

This was possible in the past, as the teams coached by the two friends never competed against one another. But this season the situation is changed, and the two coaches are rivals.

Matthews and Dorais will remain close friends; but for the time being their relationship will stop there.

LOGAN, Aug. 24.—Smithfield won from Logan in the final contest of the season here yesterday and hopped up to first place in the league standing. The score was 8 to 2. Fast playing featured the game throughout.

Olle Otto, American legion league hurler, held the slugging Summits to eight blows, and only three earned runs were made off his servings. Errors by Archibald and Dimmock, followed by hits, one of which might have been avoided by fast fielding, accounted for five of the visitors' scores.

Dutch Rock pitched superb ball for the winners, allowing but four hits, one a scratch.

Norm Nelson, who has been a stalwart Collegian for four years, but who was sold to Smithfield last Sunday, was cheered when he played a spectacular game for the Summits. He fielded well, taking nine chances, and collected three hits at bat. Good fielding was done also by Peterson, Jarvis, Falek, Archibald and Adams.

YOUNG GIRL CAUSE OF DENVER SUICIDE
DENVER, Colo., Aug. 24.—Mrs. Egan S. Willoughby, widow of Lou F. Willoughby, Denver business man, who killed himself Tuesday, declared that her husband shot himself after she refused his request that she kill a 20-year-old girl whom she charged with having broken up her home. The name of the girl was not made public.

"My husband also proposed to me that I consent for him to kill me and then himself," said Mrs. Willoughby. "When I refused to consent to this, he said he was going to commit suicide." Willoughby, who was 56 years old, was manager of the Denver branch of a type foundry company.

DIVORCE IS ASKED BY CARMEL MYERS
LOS ANGELES, August 24.—Carmel Myers, motion picture actress, Thursday filed in the Los Angeles superior court an action for divorce from Isadore B. Korshak, attorney and song writer, whom she charged with desertion. They were married in New York July 19, 1919, and a year later, according to her complaint, separated for a time only to try living together again later. But, last May, she declared, her husband departed and has not returned. Miss Myers is the daughter of the late Rabbi Isidore Myers, religious leader and author.

One could find almost as much untroubled laughter in the intimate explosion of a 6-inch shell. We understand that William hasn't stopped laughing since the first Toledo sock.

We find this quotation laid out from a certain novel: "He had willfully, if not consciously, kept a golf between his passionate soul and his open mind."

We have frequently kept an even wider golf between our passionate soul and the par of the course.

"It has been shown lately," once more quoting an exchange, "that the bites of few snakes in this country are fatal." We are not much of an authority on this subject, from the numerical viewpoint. If the bite of the second snake doesn't produce the desired hooch we knock off and call it a day.

It has been suggested that for future intercollegiate golf championships the various players wear the colors of their universities as they do in football or baseball.
